Amusing "Take-off" on Profession Enacted for Rotarians

An amusing "take-off" on the life insurance profession was furnished Rotarians at Hotel Tulsa Wednesday night by W. F. Stahl, local insurance agent, and E. M. Crawford, professional entertainer of Oklahoma City.

The skit was entitled "How They Will Sell Life Insurance in 1932." With Crawford representing A. L. Farmer, Rotarian in the life insurance classification, and Stahl representing a hard-working business man who sought to obtain a $10,000 policy, a side-splitting comedy was presented.

Crawford, as Farmer, could not find time to sell a policy to Stahl, and accepted his application, and check only after Stahl had floored him and held him down until the application could be forced upon him.

The truth about the Goldenschlag divorce case was not stated in the petition as filed, is the assertion of two of his daughters, Mrs. John Schwartz and Mrs. C. F. Wilbur, who in a communication to The World assert that the entire family is standing by the mother.

The communication states that Goldenschlag has never provided for his family but has been content to let his wife and children contribute to his support. When they no longer did this the letter states "the easiest way out of it seemed to Herman was to get a divorce from his poor wife as it would free him of the responsibility to provide food and clothing for his family."

The four Fordmen of politics made their appearance in Tulsa Tuesday night. While one spoke slowly through the edge of the business district, the three others made their way from telephone pole to telephone pole, uncereemoniously and with much speed, tearing therefrom the campaign cards of two candidates.

Investigation disclosed that the cards removed were those of A. S. J. Shaw, candidate for state treasurer, and A. K. Ross, candidate for state auditor, both running in the democratic primary. No other cards were molested.

Those who observed the four Fordmen at first paid no particular attention to their acts, but later became curious and discovered what they had been about. Their identity and their reasons for tearing off the cards of these two candidates remains a mystery.
